Summary

The academic year 2018-19 shows a singular focus on administrative training, with no engagement in refresher courses, faculty development, or induction programmes. The training attended appears to be aimed at enhancing administrative capabilities related to the CBCS (Choice-Based Credit System) and overall institutional management, reflecting a commitment to keeping up with curriculum implementation and administrative responsibilities. The recurring participation of the principal in these sessions indicates a strong focus on continuous improvement in administrative roles. However, the absence of other types of professional development activities suggests potential areas for growth in staff development that could be explored in future reports.

In summary, while the activity indicates a dedicated effort towards administrative training, a broader range of professional development activities could be beneficial for a more comprehensive approach to staff development.

Annual Report on Programmes undertaken by staffs (2019-20)

Overview

The academic year 2019-20 presents a notable shift in the professional development activities undertaken by the staff compared to the previous year. The data reveals that the focus has transitioned from solely administrative training to including a refresher course. This period is characterized by one significant programme, a two-week refresher course attended by a faculty member from the Bengali department.

Activity Chart

Summary

The academic year 2019-20 demonstrates a positive shift in the range of professional development activities undertaken by staff. The inclusion of a refresher course reflects an investment in updating and enhancing knowledge specific to the faculty's area of expertise. The two-week refresher course in Middle Age Studies with Modern Approaches signifies a commitment to academic enrichment and professional growth.
However, there is a noticeable absence of faculty induction programmes, faculty development programmes, and administrative training during this period.
This suggests a potential area for improvement in fostering broader professional development opportunities for staff.

In summary, the 2019-20 report highlights a focused effort on academic enrichment through a refresher course, but also underscores the need for a more diverse range of development activities to support overall staff growth and effectiveness. Expanding into additional professional development areas could further benefit the institution and its staff.

Summary

The 2022-23 academic year indicates a significant involvement in administrative training, with 15 out of 20 programmes focusing on this area. This shift suggests a response to the growing complexity of administrative roles and the need for enhanced skills in managing higher education institutions.

- Refresher Courses: The three refresher courses conducted in various academic fields demonstrate a continued commitment to updating and refining faculty knowledge and teaching practices. The topics covered reflect a broad range of academic interests.
- Faculty Induction Programme: The single induction programme highlights an effort to integrate new faculty, though the number of such programmes was lower compared to previous years. This suggests an opportunity to increase focus on supporting new staff members.

- Faculty Development Programme: The decrease in the number of faculty development programmes might indicate a need for more emphasis on this area, especially in the context of evolving teaching methodologies and research practices.
- Administrative Training: The substantial number of administrative training sessions underscores a strong focus on improving administrative competencies. This includes important topics like accreditation, blended learning, and capacity building.

In conclusion, the 2022-23 session reflects a strong emphasis on administrative training while maintaining some focus on academic development through refresher courses and a limited number of faculty development activities. The overall professional development strategy appears to be aligned with the current needs and challenges of higher education administration. Continued diversification and expansion of faculty development and induction programmes could further enhance staff growth and institutional effectiveness.
